The Introductory Discourse and Lectures Aug 05 2021

Excerpt from The Introductory Discourse and Lectures: Delivered in Boston, Before the Convention of Teachers, and Other Friends of Education, Assembled to Form the American Institute of Institute of Instruction; August 1830 Such are the origin and occasion Of the discourses which form the present volume.

The committee invited the lecturers, and suggested the subjects. Everything else was left entirely to the lecturers.
Their opinions are their own.
Perfect uniformity could not be expected from men who came from different and distant parts Of the country, and who met for the first time at this Convention. This free expression of opinions, independently formed, will not,

certainly, be considered unfavorable to the eliciting Of truth. Agreeably to, their instructions, the committee called a meeting, by invitations extensively circulated through the country, in the newspapers.
The time Of the summer holidays, the season Of literary anni versaries, was thought most favorable to a general attendance. About the

Dentition and Its Derangements Feb 17 2020

Excerpt from Dentition and Its Derangements: A Course of Lectures Delivered in the New York Medical College Several times, friends have made the jesting remark that I ought to change the title of my book, and call it a treatise on infantile pathology. It is true that a large number of subjects have been treated of; but it is not my fault if it be. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of

A Series of Lectures Nov 08 2021 Excerpt from A Series of Lectures: Delivered in Park Street Church, Boston, on Sabbath Evening My Dear Friends, In dedicating to you a Series of Discourses prepared for your benefit, and now published at the request of a very respectable portion of you, I think I am prompted no less by propriety than feeling. Though many of you do not belong to my particular charge, the Lecture which you have contributed to maintain is your own, and these fruits of it are your own. I am glad, also, to have this opportunity to express my gratitude for the liberality and candor with which you have supported that Exercise and stately listened to the expositions there attempted. As a distinct expression of this sentiment, I commit these plain, unadorned Discourses, which you have caused to be preached, to your patronage and protection, while in a higher sense I commend them to the favor and gracious protection of God. Woman's Rights Under the Law

Oct 15 2019 Excerpt from Woman's Rights Under the Law: In Three Lectures, Delivered in Boston, January, 1861 There seems, at first sight, a certain presumption in offering to an American public, at this moment, any book which does not treat of the great interests which convulse and perplex the United States. But experience has shown, that neither the individual nor the national mind can remain continually upon the rack; and both author and publisher have thought that a book upon a serious subject, popular in form and low in price, would find, perhaps, a more hearty welcome, under present circumstances, than in those prosperous days, when romances and poems, travels and biographies, are scattered over every table by the score. Life in Poetry Jan 30 2021

Excerpt from Life in Poetry: Law in Taste; Two Series of Lectures Delivered in Oxford, 1895 1900 Perhaps with natural piety the newly elected Professor of Poetry looks for guidance to the intentions or the character of the Founder of his Chair. But here too search is in vain: of him little is known that is definite, nothing that is remarkable. Henry Birkhead must have been born in the first quarter of the seventeenth century, for he took his degree of m.a. In 1639. He appears to have been affected by the religious difficulties of his time, for shortly after taking his degree he became a Jesuit.

Formation of Character Oct

27 2020 Excerpt from Formation of Character: Twelve Lectures Delivered in the First Presbyterian Church, New Orleans These Lectures were delivered in response to a request signed by twenty-five of the young men of the Author's church. In a brief space of time a stenographic report of the same was placed in his hands, with request for revision, in order to publication. The whole movement was a complete surprise; and without stopping to inquire whether they are intrinsically worthy of being embalmed in print, they are herewith surrendered as a testimony of affection for a class of persons whom every Pastor desires to bring into the fold of Christ. With far greater depth and tenderness of feeling than when first uttered with the living voice, they are now reproduced in permanent form; that those specially addressed "may be able after his decease to have these things always in remembrance." Generally, at the Opening of the Session of 1833-4 A portion of the following address has reference to that Lecture, and will be well understood by those who heard it. To others, the author owes some apology for the allusions which it contains, as the obnoxious expressions, if not expunged from the printed Lecture, which it is understood Dr. Dickson is about presenting to the public], may perhaps never come under their observation. The Approach to the New Testament Sep 25 2020

Excerpt from The Approach to the New Testament: Lectures Delivered in London and Cambridge, April-May, 1921 "If we learn from historical works about the people to whom the apostles write, if we learn not only their situation but their origin, habits, institutions and mode of life, it is wonderful what light - rather let me say, what life - this will put into our reading, which otherwise must be drowsy and dead." - Erasmus: Ratio seu methodus compendio perveniendi ad veram theologiam, p. 79. "The characteristic feature of the nineteenth century is the substitution of the historical method for the dogmatic, in all studies relating to the human mind. . . The great advance of criticism has been the substitution of the category of becoming for being, of the conception of relativity for that of the absolute, of movement for immobility." - Renan: Averrots et l'Averroïstne, pp. vi, vii. "Christianity now and then becomes conscious of its original negative relation to the 'world' and to the kingdom of this world, and so, in my opinion, regains some of its pristine essence and strength. A Christianity reconciled and at peace with the world is a weak and powerless affair, surely not the real and original Christianity. True Christianity may always be recognized by the fact that it seems strange and dangerous to the world." -

Paulsen: System der Ethik (Eng. tr.), p. 60. "It is now' unthinkable that any Christian should either reject the New Testament as the norm of his faith, or should try to add to it." - P. Gardener: Evolution in Christian Doctrine, p. 53. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Bonapartism Jun 22 2020 Excerpt from Bonapartism: Six Lectures Delivered in the University of London Last December the University of London honoured me with an invitation to give a short course of lectures upon a subject connected with my special studies. The lectures were delivered in University College during the month of June and, in accordance with the desire of the University, are now given to the public. I make no apologies for my choice of a subject, though to some an essay upon both the First and the Second Empire may seem to be lacking in the essential quality of dramatic unity. But though divided from one another by more than a generation, these two Bonapartist Governments were to a large extent inspired by the same principles, rested upon the support of the same intellectual and social forces.
